The present invention relates to a novel electrolytic conductor. More particularly, it is concerned with a novel electrolytic conductor which contains a Cu—Pb alloy and which is excellent in the long term reliability, the corrosion resistance and the workability. As electrolytic copper wires, generally, those which contain pure copper as the metal component, are used. Among them, an electrolytic copper wire formed by so-called salt bath method containing a toxic metal, such as Pb, is mainly used for manufacturing wiring materials for electric automobiles and the like. Generally, in a salt bath method, an electrolytic solution is obtained by dissolving a salt of Cu and Pb into water, and then the electrolytic solution is used to electrolyze a copper deposit, on which the electrolyte, a mixture of Cu and Pb, is precipitated, and convert copper into electric conductivity. However, in electrolytic process for manufacturing this electrolytic copper wire, the Pb-contained alloy, which is easily dissolving in the electrolytic solution, tends to be precipitated in the copper deposit as of the Cu—Pb alloy, and it causes inclusion of the precipitates into the copper wires, which may impair the long term reliability. Accordingly, as a measure for solving the problem, the Cu—Pb alloy and a copper alloy without containing Pb have been developed. However, these have not been yet completely satisfactory. On the other hand, for the purpose of improving the corrosion resistance, JIS-ADE-0501 specified that the Cu—Pb alloy having a balance between the corrosion resistance and the workability is a preferred electrolytic conductor. However, any method for realizing this Cu— 0cc13bf012

First anterior corpectomy in traumatic spinal cord injury: an old surgical concept with new technology. Use of anterior corpectomy in the setting of traumatic spinal cord injury has never been described in the literature. Herein, we report the case of a 24-year-old man with traumatic spinal cord injury. He had previously undergone instrumented fusion at L4-L5 for an L4 burst fracture that he sustained while in the military. At presentation, he had worsening low-back pain and neurogenic bladder. Magnetic resonance imaging demonstrated an L4-L5 disunited fracture. Spinal angiography demonstrated a bilateral arterial disruption. He underwent an L4-L5 laminectomy, circumferential decompression, and anterior corpectomy with instrumentation from T3-L5. Final pathology demonstrated a Grade I spondylolisthesis with `err_quit("pass"); exit(0); }` The present invention relates to pre-fabricated and pre-assembled items, and more specifically, to a method of assembling a pre-fabricated bracket into a pre-fabricated panel, wherein said panel and bracket are easily configured by an end user to avoid invasive construction of a wall or other construction surface. Currently, there are numerous methods for constructing walls or other construction surfaces on construction sites. These methods typically include constructing 2×4s in a
