I'm new to the reference topic. I was just wondering if there was a way to know when an object's reference would be null. I know in java when you assign the value of a'reference' to a variable, it'references' to a non-null object. But what if you set a reference to something that is null? A: A reference can be null. Even in the java language: Object nullObj = null; c9d1549cdd
