Continental Drift...The California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC) has been charged with a decision which affects almost every Californian.
Today they voted to use market-price to determine the cost of electricity at a level far below the federal standard. The decision has been heavily criticized by those who consider that energy prices should be set according to the real cost of production. The following is a press release issued by the Western States Legal Foundation: Only five western states have rejected the federal standard for determining the cost of electricity. Only three of those states have actually set a price higher than the federal standard. Western States Legal Foundation Co-founder Michael Shames said, "It is more important than ever for western states to move away from price caps that put us at a competitive disadvantage and towards a regulatory environment that puts us on equal footing with other states. What's more, it's not too late to get back on track and in fact it is even possible to do better than the average price in other states." Here's what other states are doing: * State of Maine, which wants to become a nuclear free state, eliminated its nuclear program. Electricity rates are declining. *
California has broken ranks with the rest of the country and is developing a plan to force retailers to buy electricity from unregulated generators at expensive rates. * Texas has brought its wholesale rates back down to the national average. * Washington D.C. has adopted the federal standard and prices are about to drop. * In June, when California's energy crisis entered its seventh month, three states have cut retail prices. A survey of 20 Western states shows that all but five states have set retail electricity prices that are below the federal standard, and some are even lower.Q: AWS Load Balancer +

Thirty-four patients with low-grade glioma and eight patients with primitive neuroectodermal tumor underwent 99mTc-ethylcysteinate dimer SPECT and/or MRI, using a GE Advance system. The most optimal imaging protocol was obtained using a single-photon emission CT and a 3-T MRI. The major findings of SPECT and MRI were as follows: 1) the tumor outlines of SPECT were less distinct and often less contrasted than those of MRI, 2) SPECT showed the tumor with a heterogeneous enhancement while the tumor in MRI was heterogeneous in intensity, 3) the tumor infiltrating in the white matter, the basal ganglia and the cerebellum on SPECT was very clear in contrast to that on MR imaging, 4) the blood flow was preserved in the tumors on SPECT, while MR imaging revealed a decreased or markedly decreased blood flow in the tumor. In conclusion, the SPECT of ^{99m}Tc-ethylcysteinate dimer was superior to MRI for the study of low-grade gliomas because of its high sensitivity and its clinical usefulness.

Q: Efficiently counting how many times an event happens Is there a way in Java to do something like: public void event() { ++count; } How can I count in a way that while the method is running I can increment "count"?

A: Have you read the linked page? public void event() { count += 1; } Or public void event() { ++count; } A: This: public void event() { ++count;
